After gaining the status of a candidate country for the European Union (EU), Turkey has experienced positive developments in the fields of democracy, rule of law and human rights, and many basic human rights conventions of the Council of Europe and the United Nations have been signed. Both the global consensus on defining social work as a profession that aims to protect human rights and to realize social justice, and the positive wind of the EU candidacy process increased rights-based social work approaches and discourses in the public field and in academia. Human rights and social work has started to be taught as a compulsory or optional course in social work departments. At present cutting backs are being implemented on these positive developments. Social work education and practices are also affected by these adverse conditions.

In this paper, firstly, the effects of developments in the field of human rights on social work education and practices will be analysed. Secondly, the findings of the study that was carried out with the content analysis method that consists of a document review on the human rights and social work courses' syllabuses will be shared.

Comparative analysis of the implementation and development of personal assistance in Portugal and Spain. A view from Social Work.

Abstract:

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights enshrined equality in dignity and rights for all people, but it was necessary to approve an International Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities given the lack of access to the exercise of human rights by this group. The key tool for their social participation under conditions of equality, included in the Convention itself, is personal assistance. Spain incorporated personal assistance as an economic benefit with Law 39/2006, of December 14, on the promotion of personal autonomy and care for people in situations of dependency. For its part, Portugal did so through its Decree 129/2017 creating the Support Model for Independent Living. The objective of this work is to carry out a comparative analysis of the implantation and development of personal assistance in both countries, positioning itself from the point of view of Social Work, as an essential profession and discipline for the promotion of the independent life of the group, favouring that can live their vital projects. As a result, despite having been legislated for more than 15 years, personal assistance continues to be a residual resource in Spain. Meanwhile, Portugal, about to complete its pilot project, has 29 independent living support centres around the country, whose aim is to continue and extend their services to a larger population. In conclusion, the implementation of personal assistance is very weak and Social Work contributes to its promotion.
